Boston bars with games and arcades

Get your game on. CHARLIE WOLFSON

There are a lot of great places to grab a drink in Boston, but only a few can satisfy your inner gamer. Get your game on at these bars with arcades and games around town.

Bushwood Cocktail Club
Fans of "Caddyshack" should take a trip over to this retro bar. Modeled after the fictitious country club in the classic golf comedy, this place is full of old-school games like Pac-Man, Skee Ball and pinball, plus it has a themed-menu based on the movie's characters. Noon-2 a.m., 131 Broad St., Boston, bushwoodboston.com

Brass Union

This Somerville spot offers a neat setting, located underground in the historic Union Square police station. Choose from over 20 draft beers, and peruse the menu for a burger or sandwich before you play some nostalgic games like shuffleboard, Rock 'Em Sock 'Em Robots and bumper pool. 5 p.m.-1 a.m., 70 Union Square, Somerville, brassunion.com

Highball Lounge

Highball is perfect for a younger-minded crowd looking for an energetic night of good drinks and care-free games. In addition to Pac-Man and some other classics, patrons can battle their friends in Jenga, Hungry Hungry Hippos, Uno and Cards Against Humanity. 5 p.m.-midnight, 90 Tremont St., Boston, highballboston.com

A4cade

It's a match made in heaven: Roxy's grilled cheese combined with an arcade bar. You're a ride on the T to Cambridge away from a gourmet grilled cheese (with bacon), one of dozens of cold beers and a game of pinball all at your disposal at the very same time. They've got some cool video games, too, including Galaga, Mortal Kombat 2 and more. 5 p.m.-1 a.m., 292 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, area4.com

Tapestry

The Red Sox are finished for the year, but there's still fun to be had in Fenway. This is a dual concept restaurant, so you can either check out the Expo Kitchen for Neapolitan pizzas, bar snacks and beverages (best enjoyed while playing bumper pool, shuffleboard or darts) go to the adjacent Club Room for more an eclectic, relaxed dining experience. 5:30 p.m.-11 p.m., 69 Kilmarnock St., Boston, tapestry.restaurant

Eventide brings the best of Maine's seafood cuisine to Boston.

How Eventide Fenway pays homage to New England seafood shacks

The new restaurant is now open in Boston.

MATT JUUL

Whether it's a meaty lobster roll or a towering plate of freshly shucked oysters, Bostonians can't get enough seafood. Now locals can feast on their favorite dishes right next door to Fenway Park.

Eventide Oyster Co. is bringing the best of Maine seafood to the Hub with its new restaurant

Eventide Fenway. Located on Boylston Street, the counter-style eatery is the latest offering from co-owners Andrew Taylor and Mike Wiley, who took home the 2017 James Beard Award for Best Chef in the northeast for their work at Eventide in Portland. As a Newton native, Taylor tells Metro that he's excited to be back in Boston and can't wait to add to the city's constantly evolving culinary scene.

"As we were looking for the first place to expand outside of Portland, Boston seemed like a natural fit," Taylor says. "As for Fenway, we really love the energy and development occurring here. It's a growing neighborhood that has a great proximity to customers — fans on game day, office workers, residents in the new apartment buildings, students from the nearby colleges."

While Eventide Fen-

way boasts many of the same, great seafood options as the Maine location, the new restaurant forgoes fine dining, sit-down service for a more casual set-up.

According to Wiley, fans can expect a larger version of Eventide's famous brown butter lobster roll, as well as an oyster list featuring choices from Maine and Massachusetts. The menu will also include a rotating selection of specials from Chef de Cuisine Ian Maschal that will be exclusive to the Boston location.

Dubbed a "fine-casual" concept, Eventide Fenway allows its patrons to choose their own seats as well as pay for their food and drink via staff members using tablets. Once an order is placed, customers can watch the meal come together behind a counter or wait at their seat for a text message to confirm that the food is ready.

Guests who need another bite or glass of wine or beer can place orders through additional staff members in the sit-down area.

"As opposed to recreating the experience of Eventide in Portland, we wanted to do something a little more casual," says co-owner Arlin Smith. "It is fun and easy, a sort of homage to the window walk-up seafood shacks that used to dot the New England coast."

at the museum when MFA Late Nites debuts
this weekend.

Boston's Museum of Fine Arts is launching its seasonal after-hours series Friday, Oct. 13, which will feature an evening of food, drinks, live music and more. In addition to all the fun, guests will receive a sneak peek at Lineage of Eccentrics, an exhibit dedicated to Japanese artist Takashi Murakami.

From 8 p.m. to 2 a.m., attendees will get the chance to rock out to music by DJ YVNG PAVL, Gucci Vuitton, Riobamba, Ed Balloon, Durkin and The Blade Runners, as well as check out a performance by Urbanity Dance. Additionally, local hip-hop artists will throw down during a three-round slam poetry-style competition.

For the foodies out there, MFA Late Nites will feature a chef showdown at the museum's glass-enclosed Shapiro Family Courtyard. Five chefs will offer their takes on Japanese street food, which guests can try before voting on a winner. Small plates are $7 each, or $30 for all five.

After filling up on Japanese cuisine, guests can check out the Moonlight Beer Garden in the Calderwood Courtyard. From 8 p.m. to 1:30 a.m., attendees will be able to sip Sapporo, Asashi and various local brews as they munch on special soft pretzels. Beer, wine and a selection of nonalcoholic drinks will also be available at the Taste Café, located near the Rap Slam competition.

Advance tickets to MFA Late Nites are $13 each. Tickets can be purchased at the door for $20 on Oct. 13; however, they will only be available on a first come, first served basis.

If you can't make it to the after-hours event, another MFA Late Nites installment is planned for March 3.

Enchanted Forest brings a touch of magic to City Hall

The art exhibit is part of this year's HUBweek.
ZIPPORAH OSEI

City Hall Plaza will undergo a fairy tale transformation this weekend. The Enchanted Forest exhibit is taking place at Government Center and should be a magical experience for anyone who stops by.

The Forest uses color, shape, shadow and music to create an immersive experience featuring multiple hands-on activities that are perfect for visitors of all ages.

The Enchanted Forest was created to highlight how important trees are to our public health infrastructure and is just one of the exhibits at the Immersion art experience. The goal of the event is to awaken creativity and inspire innovation.

The festivities will feature dozens of live arts displays on stages located around City Hall Plaza. The event will also include film screenings, dance performances and more. Immersion will be open to the public from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. Thursday through Sunday, however, the Enchanted Forest will be open throughout the day as well.

Immersion is one of the attractions of this year's HUBweek, a five-day festival that explores the progress being made in Boston by celebrating the intersections of art, science and community. During the day, HUBweek attendees can check out over 175 free and low cost events dotted around the city. At night, they can let loose at nightly parties that feature live performances, dance floors and geodesic domes.

HUBweek routinely brings some of some of the world's greatest minds to town, and for 2017, a few big names are joining the party. Former Secretary of State John Kerry and former mayor of New York City Michael Bloomberg will be in attendance, as well as Deepak Chopra and renowned journalist Malcolm Gladwell.

'So You Think You Can Dance' stars waltz into Boston

Season 14 winner Lex Ishimoto talks about returning to his old stomping grounds.

ZIPPORAH OSEI

"So You Think You Can Dance," the Emmy award-winning show that's turned us all into dance enthusiasts, is taking its stars from television sets to the stage as part of their new tour.

The top 10 finalists from season 14 and two of the show's all-stars are coming to Boston's Orpheum Theatre on Oct. 13 to perform live. This weekend's show won't be the first time season 14 winner Lex Ishimoto has performed in the Hub, as he trained with Boston Ballet's second company.

We caught up with Ishimoto to chat about coming back to town, the new tour and more.

What can fans expect from this upcoming show?

They can definitely

Lex Ishimoto is excited to be back in Boston. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED expect to see some of the more popular routines from the show, but there will also be some new routines that fans have never seen. I can't give too much away—you'll have to get a ticket to see what happens.

You recently trained with Boston Ballet's second company. What was that like?

It was absolutely amazing. I spent around two years with them. They have one of the best programs in the world right now. Having that training and having that professionalism built into me by Boston Ballet was great. I feel like I did a lot with those skills. Once you have ballet training, you can do anything and they really did motivate me.

I love Boston in general. I love the city's energy. I feel like the city itself has so much love for the arts. I performed at the Boston Opera House a few times, so I'm really excited to return [to Boston] and have a good show.

The show takes over the Orpheum Theatre on Friday night.

What were some of your favorite places to check out in Boston?

I love shopping, so Newbury Street is the place to be. I spent a lot of time walking around there. There's a spot called Bodega that I absolutely love because I like footwear. But other than that, I just loved going to the central parks in Boston like the Common and the Public Garden. I'd love to just see what's new and meet up with some old friends. Maybe we'll hit up a couple coffee spots. I can't come to Boston without going to Dunkin' Donuts.

What do you think of Boston's dance community?

I'm from California, so the dance community there is very large and it's exploded a lot recently. Boston's known for their community as well, but on a smaller scale. But there's some big love in the community here. The love makes it feel like a big community, which I really appreciated when I moved out here. It made it a smooth transition because there was so much support. I felt comfortable taking classes outside of the Ballet and meeting people that way. The dancers here are amazing at what they do and they're really holding it down on the east coast.

Now that you've won, what's next for you and your dance career?

I'm not too much of a future guy, so we'll just have to see what's next for my career. I like to stay in the present and live life in the moment that it's in. There's a high probability of me joining Travis Wall's Shaping Sound Company, but after that, you might see a wild streak. We'll see.

Get inside the heads of serial killers on the newest Netflix hit 'Mindhunter'

Holt McCallany talks to Metro about its depressing timeliness, and David Fincher.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

Humans can be unimaginably cruel, but as a society we still find crime stories compulsively intriguing. And the latest evidence on Netflix, "Mindhunter," is an adaptation of John E. Douglas and Mark Olshaker's "Mind Hunter: Inside The FBI's Elite Serial Crime Unit."

Lead star Holt McCallany, who plays Special Agent Bill Tench, spoke with us just days after the terrible mass shooting in Las Vegas.

"This is what our show is all about. What, exactly, are the psychological underpinnings? No-one lives a perfectly reasonable life until they're 30 years old and then goes out and starts murdering people," said McCallany. "There are warning signs. There's a whole evolution, there are earlier crimes, and it's identifying what these warning signs are. Like a kid that tortures pets, or a kid that's constantly setting fires, bed-wetting [or] a serial arsonist. It usually starts with an abusive mother, who abuses her son. An absent or alcoholic father. There are certain commonalities that you can identify and it's understanding what those are that can lead you to try to understand how a guy gets to be what these guys eventually become. Our story begins in '79, but "Mindhunter" was written after John Douglas had left the FBI, in 1995. This is the first of serial killer profiling."

Prepare to binge-watch 10 episodes of murderous entertainment NETFLIX

On the origins of "Mindhunter"

"Our show is set a couple of years after [J. Edgar] Hoover died, and he ran the FBI with an iron fist and it was an incredibly conservative agency. Trying to empathize with criminals and trying to figure out the traumas that led them to commit terrible crimes was not something that Hoover thought was a practical use of an agent's time. It wasn't until Hoover was gone that the agents started thinking — wait a minute — if we understand these killers maybe it will help us catch them more easily."

On working with director David Fincher

"I've worked with David on and off for 25 years. I was in David's first film, "Alien 3." Then I was in "Fight Club," and so I was invited back for "Mindhunter." It was a great honor and opportunity for me, because I don't think that there's any doubt that David is one of the great directors of his generation. I believe he will be remembered as one of the greatest of all time."

On the show's impact

"Some of my colleagues have said that they suddenly found themselves being scared when walking down dark alleyways. That didn't happen to me, but when you really look under the hood, and look at the sheer brutality of these crimes, it's truly jaw-dropping."

"Mindhunter's" entire first season will debut on Netflix on Friday October 13.

The rally is planned for the Parkman Bandstand on Boston Common. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Boston Free Speech group planning another rally for November

"Stand for the flag. Stand for the Constitution," the event's poster reads. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

The Boston Free Speech group behind the controversial rally on Boston Common in August has announced another event in November.

The group announced that it is a co-host of the "Rally for the Republic," planned for Nov. 18 at the Parkman Bandstand.

Other groups involved include Resist Marxism, Massachusetts Patriots United, and Massachusetts Oath Keepers, according to their Facebook page — all groups which say their goals are to defend the Constitution and specifically free speech.

A landing page for the rally is on the Resist Marxism group's website, which is also soliciting volunteers "who can commit to come to the rally."

"Calling patriots across America to the Boston Common on November 18th in support of the Rally for the Republic," the site says. "We ask patriots from across the nation to stand with us and defend freedom of speech in Boston from the machinations of Mayor Marty Walsh and the violence of the mobs. We will not allow them to curtail our 1st amendment rights. If patriots will not defend freedom of speech then it will be lost."

The rally is intended to be a "patriotic theme," according to the group, to defend free speech, support the Constitution, stand for the American flag and honor veterans.

Though the Resist Marxism website says that the rally is taking place in part because "the nation's flag is being disrespected by athletes, celebrities, and politicians," the Boston Free Speech group said on their Facebook that they support "an individual's right to salute, stand, sit, ignore the flag as they see appropriate, as it is all First Amendment protected."

Resist Marxism also said that veterans' sacrifices are "forgotten" and that free speech is under attack by local governments and groups like ANTIFA as reasons for why the rally will be held.

"It is time to reclaim our nation and what better place to do this than in the city where the American Revolution began," the group said.

The groups have applied for a permit with the city parks department, a spokesman confirmed, for what they called a "Patriotic Freedom Rally" on Nov. 18. "The permit is pending and will go through the normal permitting review process," the department spokesman added.

CA WILDFIRES

Dry weather could propel California wildfires that killed 21

Firefighters feared resurgent winds and dry conditions on Wednesday would spread the wildfires that have killed at least 21 people, destroyed 3,500 homes and businesses and blanketed California's famed wine country in smoke.

Nearly 170,000 acres have been scorched by 22 large fires in what state fire officials say is one of the deadliest wildfire outbreaks in California history.

More than 550 people were still missing in Sonoma County on Wednesday morning, said Jennifer Laroque, a spokeswoman for the county's emergency centers. It was unclear how many were fire victims or had not checked in after evacuating their homes.

Santa Rosa, the wine country's largest city, was particularly hard hit by the so-called Tubbs fire. In some neighborhoods, block after block was ravaged, leaving nothing but charred debris, broken walls, chimneys and the steel frames of burned-out cars.

"It's like driving through a war zone," J.J. Murphy, 22, an evacuee, said of the area.

Murphy, five relatives, a bird, a dog and two cats piled into their camper van to flee, he said.

"It's crazy how in just a few hours a place I've recognized all my life I can't recognize," he added. REUTERS

The MSPCA has taken in eight dogs – three adults and five puppies – from storm-ravaged Puerto Rico. MSPCA-ANGELL

Puppies rescued from Puerto Rico will soon be up for adoption in Massachusetts

The MSPCA recently rescued dogs from hurricane-devastated Puerto Rico. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

As Puerto Rico continues to reel from the devastation of Hurricane Maria, New England shelters are rescuing animals from the island, including the MSPCA, which just recovered eight dogs, including five puppies.

The three adult dogs and five puppies, which are between eight and nine weeks old, are in quarantine at the MSPCA-Nevins farm in Methuen, the MSPCA said.

They arrived in the St. Hubert's Animal Welfare Center in Madison, New Jersey, on Monday night from Puerto Rico and were driven to Massachusetts from that location.

The dogs appear to be in good health, according to the MSPCA, but will be evaluated over the next few days to ensure any health issues are addressed before they are placed for adoption. The puppies are "playful and social," spokesperson Rob Halpin said.

These dogs were already homeless and living in an animal shelter in Puerto Rico when the hurricane hit. They're described as satos, according to the MSPCA, which is the common name for mixed-breed dogs in Puerto Rico.

Mike Keiley, director of adoption centers and programs at MSPCA-Angell, hopes to have all eight dogs available for adoption this weekend.

"We're doing what we have always done: ensuring we are ready and able to take in animals from areas of the world badly impacted by recent extreme weather," he said in a statement. "We'll do our best to ensure all of these dogs are placed in wonderful homes. Now more than ever, the international animal-welfare organization needs to come together to ensure we can protect the most vulnerable animals among us, and I'm so proud that we're doing that."

Last week, the MSPCA rescued 34 cats from similarly hurricane-ravaged St. John in the Virgin Islands. Those cats were also already homeless and living in a shelter before the storm. Fourteen have already been placed into new forever homes in Massachusetts.

"Now more than ever, the international animal welfare organization needs to come together to ensure we can protect the most vulnerable animals among us, and I'm so proud that we're doing that."

Puerto Rico facing fresh water shortage after Hurricane Maria

Water in Puerto Rico is so scarce that people there are forced to drink dirty water and then becoming infected with leptospirosis. RONALD AVILA

By 10:30 a.m. in Río Piedras, Puerto Rico, the temperature already exceeds 80 degrees.

Under the hot sun, people line up outside a supermarket in the poor San Juan suburb. Like many others, Mario Verde was hoping to find drinking water and he's brought with him four empty gallon jugs. He's about to find out that there is no water there.

At home, he has tap water but says he doesn't want to have to use it for drinking, because he doesn't trust that it's clean.

The lack of water has led several rural communities on the island to drink, wash and bathe in rivers and springs. As a result, the mayor of the town of Canóvanas, Lorna Soto, reported in recent days that about seven people from her municipality were infected with leptospirosis, a bacterium transmitted by the urine of some animals, which can be deadly. Metro received information that in the towns of Moca, Arecibo and Loíza, there were also other cases.

After the hurricane, thousands of homes in Puerto Rico were left without drinking water. In stores, it sells out in the blink of an eye. The hurricane was on Sept. 20, but today only about 64 percent, or 800,000, of the residents get water, according to the director of the Aqueduct and Sewer Authority (AAA), Eli Díaz.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) reported yesterday that it distributed an estimated 7 million liters of water. However, in communities like Punta Santiago in Humacao or

The lack of water has led rural communities on the island to drink, wash and bathe in rivers and springs. RONALD AVILA

Martel in Arecibo, people say that they are not receiving enough supplies.

The claim extends around the entire country. One of the most dramatic claims came yesterday from the mayor of Comerío — a town in the island's mountainous interior — Josean Santiago, who said that floods took all the drinking water and sanitation pipelines.

The AAA informed him that they need to award a contract to install new pipes and that the project could take about two months from the start of the contract, if the river does not grow. The town has about 7,000 families, and the mayor has only two tanker trucks to distribute to approximately 200 families a day.

It also distributes bottled water that it picks up at a distribution center in the metropolitan area of Bayamón with eight brigades that go house-to-house. A National Guard brigade arrived in that mountain area with equipment to purify water, but they cannot distribute it because they have to wait up to seven days for the AAA laboratory to certify its potability.

"There is no drinking water. There is no water — in my town there is no water," said Santiago almost on the verge of tears in a radio interview with WKAQ. He said that people are drinking water from runoff and bodies of water.

Belfast at night. ALL PHOTOS BY TOURISM IRELAND

Belfast Castle is a 19th-century beauty.

There's never been a better time to discover Northern Ireland. Book direct flights to Belfast from Stewart International Airport and Providence/Boston for as little as $99* one way at norwegian.com. (*T&C apply, subject to availability)

Take a historic tour of the city in a Black Cab.

The new Belfast

Northern Ireland's capital city is a tranquil hub of history and culture.

ED CONDRAN
letters@metro.us

The smiling faces of the Irish is where it starts in Belfast. The friendly waitstaff, attentive bartenders and the charming locals help make for a unique experience when visiting the capital of Northern Ireland. Belfast is a city with great appeal and unforgettable sightseeing.

There is so much to see and do. From stories of the Titanic to medieval castles and modern museums, it's no wonder why Belfast is one of Northern Ireland's most exciting places to visit.

Getting around

Taking a taxi in Belfast has a different meaning than boarding a cab in any other city, as entering a Black Cab doesn't just take you from Point A to Point B. The vehicle allows visitors to embark on a tour of the beautiful and vibrant city. A local guide will tailor your tour, giving you the option of where you would like to experience most and offering a steady stream of unique commentary.

Political murals are a popular part of the ride. The rich, fascinating history of Belfast is explained and you'll have the chance to be part of that history by writing your own message on one of the city's many peace walls. You'll leave with a deep understanding of Belfast's dramatic past as you relax in the tranquil present.

Pubs are a great way to relax in Belfast and there are so many to choose from. The Muddlers Club is the perfect place to start. Like many fine pubs in Ireland, the Muddlers Club has a rich history. The club was named after the secret society that met at that location more than 200 years ago.

Birthplace of the Titanic

Along with the many things to do and see in Belfast, the city is also famous for being the birthplace of the RMS Titanic just over a century ago. The fascination with the "unsinkable" ship's demise has never faded even 20 years after James Cameron's classic film "Titanic" hit screens. It'd be a shame for those visiting Belfast to leave the city without experiencing the Titanic Quarter and Titanic Belfast, the largest Titanic visitor experience in the world and home to a number of original Titanic and White Star Line artifacts.

There are nine different interactive galleries with multiple dimensions in the exhibition and the special effects, interactive rides and full-scale reconstructions approximate what it was like to be part of the Titanic.

Visitors can also walk the decks of the nearby SS Nomadic, which is the world's last remaining White Star vessel and explore the shipyard where the Titanic was built. More than 100 years of maritime and social history is there for those fascinated by the White Star Line.

Take in the views

After experiencing the Titanic, check out the views from the Belfast Castle Estate. You'll have a breathtaking view of Belfast Lough (bay) and the entire city. Immerse yourself in the history and beauty of Belfast Castle, constructed by the third Marquis of Donegall who decided to build a new house on the lower slopes of Cave Hill in 1862. The building is in the striking Scottish Baronial style and during the Second World War, it was used as a naval command center. After an extensive renovation, the building was reopened to the public 30 years ago.

The grounds are gorgeous. There are a number of landscaped gardens, mature mixed woodlands and the home of a wide variety of wildlife including long-eared owls and sparrowhawks.

Learn your medieval history

Castle aficionados will not want to miss Carrickfergus Castle, which has a much more extensive history than Belfast Castle. Construction of the castle commenced during the 12th when a royal mandate was passed to ensure that the castle and its buildings were protected. The nearly 1,000-year-old castle (construction began in 1177) is one of the best preserved medieval structures in all of Northern Ireland.

If those walls could talk. Carrickfergus Castle served a military role until 1928 and has seen its share of battles, including the Battle of

Titanic Belfast

Carrickfergus in 1597 and the Siege of Carrickfergus in 1689.

Architectural delights

You don't have to be a botanist to fall in love with the gorgeous grounds of the Belfast Botanic and Horticultural Society, which opened in 1828. The 28-acre public park features the unique Palm House Conservatory, which is one of the world's earliest examples of a curvilinear cast iron glasshouse.

The once private park, which is filled with lilies and xanthorrhoea, also hosts concerts. Kings of Leon, the White Stripes and Irish icons U2, have played the Botanic Gardens. Bono has said that it was one of the most beautiful venues U2 has ever played in its 30-plus-year career.

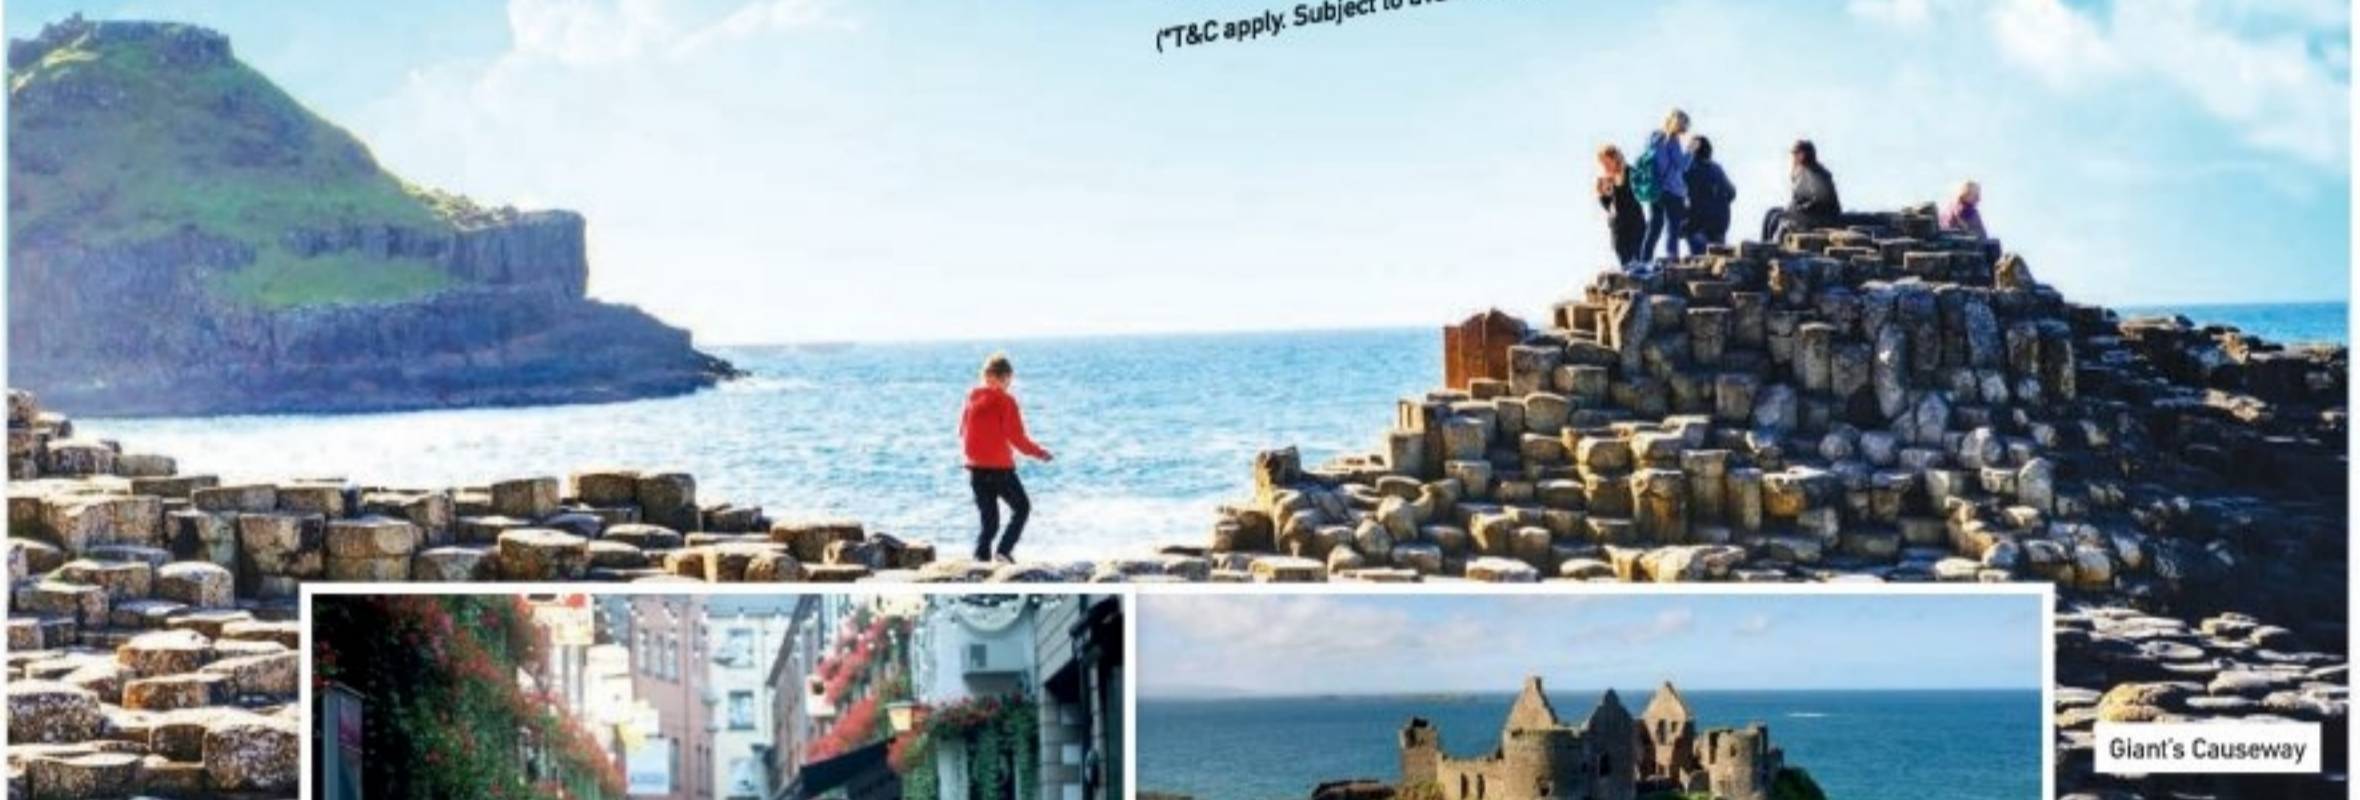

For some of Belfast's even more eclectic performances, October visitors to the city will be treated to a variety of acts and performances at the Belfast International Arts Festival. Engaging and cutting-edge visual arts, music and dance bring the city's architectural marvels and historical venues to life at a pulsating speed.

Those fascinated by ancient architecture should also check out Queen's University, established in 1810. Charles Lanyon's dramatic design borrows heavily from the Gothic and Tudor character of the great medieval universities, particularly Magdalen College in Oxford.

London's hidden gems

There's plenty of the British capital that remains under the radar.

Fodor's Travel

Bar-Hop Along the Bermondsey Beer Mile
London is well known for its drinking culture, and the Bermondsey Beer Mile makes for an intense lesson in some of London's best craft beer. Nine independent craft breweries and bottle shops are housed in the old brick railway arches of Bermondsey. Their proximity to each other and the decision to synchronize opening times on Saturdays has led to the birth of the Bermondsey Beer Mile.

Eat Your Way Through Maltby Street Market
While Borough Market

is the most famous food market in the city and Broadway Market in Hackney is undoubtedly the hippest, Maltby Street Market might just be London's most underappreciated weekend stop for exotic cuisine. Perhaps due to its compact size — a long narrow stretch of Bermondsey sidewalk sandwiched between railway arches — Maltby even flies under the radar of some Londoners. From gourmet grilled cheese toasties to authentic jerk chicken, there's enough variety to excite even the most jaded gourmand.

The Famous Graves of Highgate Cemetery
For a unique way to enjoy some peace and quiet within the metropolis, check out London's Victorian cemeteries. Known informally as the Magnificent Seven, the city's seven 19th-century cemeteries were part of a societal trend of visiting cemeteries for peace and relaxation rather than as a duty to pay respects to departed loved ones.

Highgate Cemetery is the most famous of the Magnificent Seven and modern Londoners have carried on the traditions of the Victorians, exploring its flora and fauna and finding an appealingly atmospheric place to wander.

Cocktails on a Carpark
There's no shortage of places to find a bar with great views in London (The Shard and Tate Modern both have bars that provide excellent photo opportunities), but if you're willing to travel deep into south London, a bar on the 10th level of a multi-story car park awaits. Climb the fluorescent pink staircase to the very top (there's no elevator) and the ramshackle structure of Frank's Café opens out before you, offering up drinks, snacks, and the main event: a killer view. Frank's is an annual seasonal pop-up that runs May through September.

Travel on the Venice Canals
There are no gondolas, but the affectionately named neighborhood of Little Venice has plenty of narrow boats, waterside cafés and independent shops to make up for its slightly misleading nickname. A 10-minute walk north of Paddington, the picturesque waterways of Little Venice provide the backdrop to tranquil strolls that could take you as far as the Docklands if you're up for a trek.

Get Blinded by the Neon at God's Own Junkyard
Owned and operated by neon artist Chris Bracy, God's Own Junkyard is a working business that has morphed into a part-time museum, opening on weekends to cater to neon fans across the globe. Known as "the place where neon never dies," the site is a vast collection of salvaged signs, letters, and displays that are being returned to their former glories. Accompanied by the in-house café The Rolling Scones, it also makes for a unique place to enjoy afternoon tea.

Meet the Otters at the London Wetland Centre
Besides pigeons and the occasional urban fox, London really isn't the place to spot free-roaming wildlife, but you don't have to stray too far from the heart of the city to find a thriving urban oasis. Located in Barnes, 10 minutes from Hammersmith, the London Wetland Centre is the place to walk among moths, rare birds, dragonflies, and other insects as you warm up to the main event: the otters. At their popular Meet the Otters events, everyone is invited to watch the river animals playing, foraging, and swimming as they come looking for their breakfast and lunch.

John Farrell won three AL East crowns during his time with the Red Sox, but also managed the team to two last place finishes in the division. GETTY IMAGES

It was time for Farrell to go

John Farrell had to go. And even though Red Sox president of baseball operations Dave Dombrowski didn't want to get into specifics during his press conference, we all know the dirty details.

It was announced on Wednesday morning that Farrell would not be returning as manager in 2018, the final year of his contract. So, in other words, Farrell was fired.

Farrell won a World Series in his first season as Red Sox manager in 2013 and he became the first in team history to win back-to-back American League East titles, in 2016 and 2017. Like most managers in Major League Baseball, Farrell received too much credit when they won it all in '13 and took too much of the blame when the last two postseason appearances ended in the ALDS.

That's not to say he doesn't deserve some credit. And that's not to say he doesn't deserve some of the blame. He does. But had either Chris Sale or Drew Pomeranz shown up for Games 1 or 2, respectively, in Houston last week, perhaps the Red Sox would still be playing baseball. Sale and Pomeranz and to an extent, Craig Kimbrel, deserve most of the blame for losing to the Astros the way they did. Those three were the Red Sox' best pitchers all year long, but they no-showed when it mattered the most.

There are contributing factors, of course. The offense struggled. The clubhouse leadership was questionable. And the managerial decisions made along the way were mind-boggling, none more difficult to stomach than in this year's ALDS.

Looking back on the four-game series with Houston, it was clear that Hanley Ramirez and Rafael Devers were the Red Sox' most productive hitters. Ramirez went 8-for-14 (.571) with two doubles, three RBI, and two runs scored. Devers went 4-for-11 (.364) with two home runs, five RBI, and three runs scored.

Yet, Farrell put together two different lineups in the series that had either Ramirez or Devers starting on the bench. He had an injured Eduardo Nunez starting over Ramirez at DH in Game 1 and he had Deven Marrero starting over Devers at third base against lefty Dallas Keuchel in Game 2.

Ramirez missed just one at-bat in Game 1 after Nunez had to be carried off the field with a knee injury. But it could have been a big at-bat, because Ramirez finished the game 2-for-3 with a double. Either way, the idea of wanting to begin a playoff series with Ramirez on the bench is nothing short of bizarre.

In Game 2, Devers did come in to pinch-hit for Marrero in the seventh inning, but the Red Sox were already trailing 8-1 at that point and Marrero had already went 0-for-2 with two strikeouts. No strikeout bigger than in the second inning with runners on first and third and nobody out, already trailing the game 2-0.

Imagine if Farrell had let two of his best hitters get at-bats early in Games 1 and 2 of the postseason? What a concept that would be.

Even if the results ended up being the same, those type of idiotic decisions, in October, are enough to wholly justify a manager change. And while there's obviously a lot more that goes into that change, Farrell's decision-making when the stakes were absolutely at their highest is undoubtedly one of the aforementioned contributing factors.

It's a near certainty that we'll hear stories come out about how Farrell was portrayed in his own clubhouse. And it probably won't be a good look for anyone.

But it would have been a worse look had the Red Sox brought Farrell back to manage the team in 2018.

Without a doubt, it was time for him to go.

Candidates

A look at who could be the next manager, from most to least likely.

Alex Cora: Cora, the Astros bench coach, is still just 41-years-old and might be just what the doctor ordered for this particular Red Sox roster.

Brad Ausmus: Dombrowski hired Ausmus in 2013 in Detroit. Ausmus was canned last month.

Ron Gardenhire: Gardenhire managed the Twins from 2002-14, so people automatically assume he's ancient. In actuality, Gardenhire is only 59.

Gabe Kapler: Kapler had a chance to join Dave Roberts' coaching staff (Kapler was up for the job Roberts eventually got), but declined — saying he was happy as the Dodgers' director of player development instead.

Jason Varitek: Not happening.

NFL best bets, odds for Week 6

Where to place your money this weekend.

ROBERT CRISCOLA
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

A glance at Week 6 in the NFL.

Browns at Texans (-10)
The Browns have lost 15 straight road contests, covering on just three occasions and look like a bad bet once more on Sunday. They encounter a Texans defense that just lost JJ Watt and Whitney Mercilus for the season, but Cleveland has cracked the 20-point plateau just once all year (against the hapless Colts). Now they're faced with a quarterback conundrum of sorts, as DeShone Kizer was benched last week in favor of Kevin Hogan, who held his own in the second half against the Jets in a 17-14 defeat. No matter their decision, Houston's offense is far more dynamic thanks to rookie sensation DeShaun Watson. The Texans are 3-1 ATS in games started by Watson this year and have averaged over 44 PPG in their last three contests. Expect Houston to dominate the time of possession battle en route to a comfortable victory at home.

The pick: Texans -10

Steelers at Chiefs (-4.5)
The Chiefs have won and covered in all five games they've played this season and should run that streak up to six against the underachieving Steelers. Kansas City has the number-one scoring offense in the league and is poised to take advantage of a glaring mismatch in the ground game. The Chiefs' rushing attack, led by Kareem Hunt, is the NFL's second-best by YPG and will face the league's fourth-worst run stoppers. Pittsburgh has the best pass-stopping unit in football but Alex Smith is having a career-year, leading the league's 10th-best aerial attack. Age appears to be catching up to Ben Roethlisberger, who threw five INTs to the Jaguars at home last week. Le'Veon Bell has been solid but not spectacular this year, with just one 100-yard game under his belt through five weeks. His longest carry this season is just 21 yards. It's hard to envision the Steelers matching strides with the league's best team on the road. The Chiefs are the best bet of the week.

The pick: Chiefs -4.5

Giants at Broncos (-11.5)
Eli Manning faces a daunting task opposing Denver's defense without Odell Beckham Jr. and Brandon Marshall and possibly Sterling Shepard (considered day-to-day). The Giants average fewer than 78 YPG rushing, so their run game can't be counted on either. New York's defense should receive a heavy dose of CJ Anderson and the Broncos' third-rated rushing attack, as the Giants have been highly vulnerable on the ground through five games (29th by YPG). This should enable the Broncos to control the clock (fourth in the NFL by time of possession). Expect Denver to prevail in a lopsided affair on Sunday night.
The pick: Broncos -11.5

3 Things to watch for as Patriots take on the Jets

1 Make them look like the real Jets

How in the world do the Jets, who many were pegging for an 0-16 season a month and a half ago, have a winning record (3-2) in mid-October?

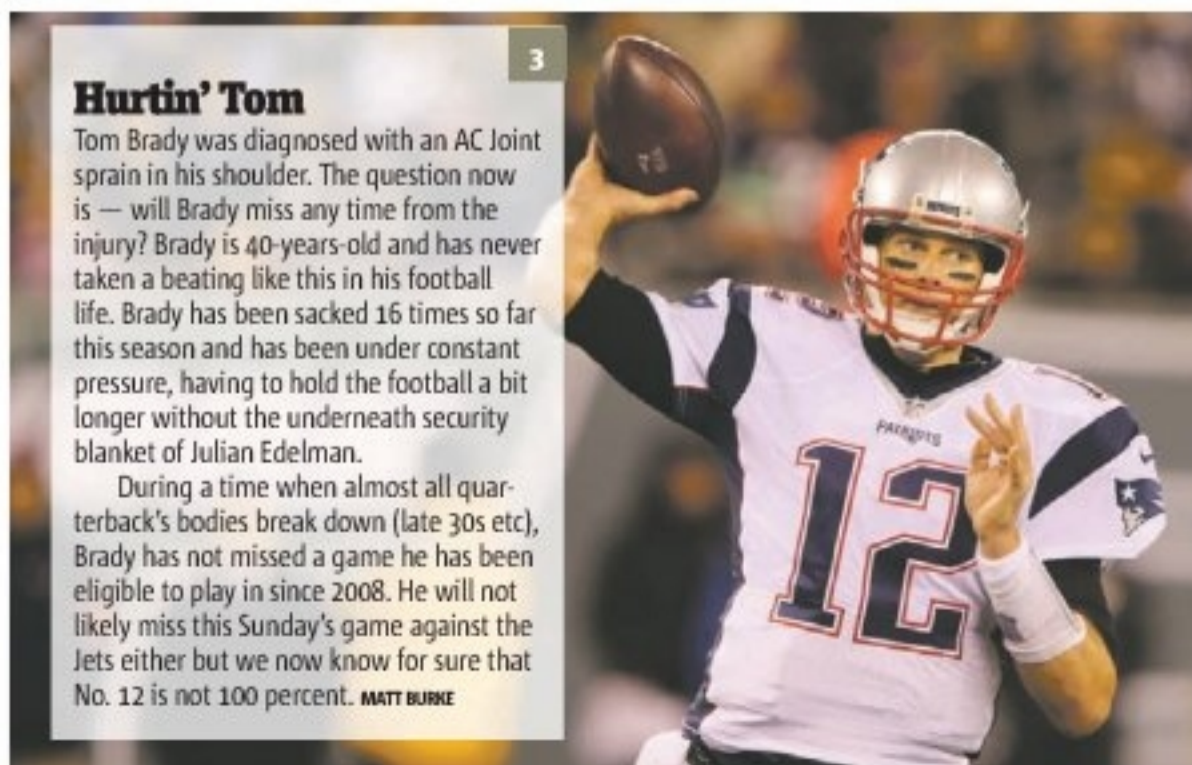

Well, it does help that the teams they've beaten (Browns, Jaguars, Dolphins) have a combined record of 5-9, but let's give credit where credit is due. The Jets defense currently ranks a respectable 15th in the NFL in points allowed per game at 21.2 and is particularly good against the pass, allowing just 211.6 passing yards per game (12th in NFL).

The only top 15 QB they've faced all season, however, was Oakland's Derek Carr in Week 2, and Carr completed 23-of-28 passes for three touchdowns, zero picks and a 136.6 passer rating in a 45-20 Raiders win. There's no reason to think Tom Brady (or Jimmy Garoppolo) should struggle in this one. The Jets defense also allows 143 rushing yards per game (30th in NFL), so the Pats could have a breakout day out of the backfield as well this Sunday in New Jersey (1 p.m., CBS).

2 It's McCown, not McClown

It's easy to poke fun at the career at Josh McCown as he's been mostly a career backup with stops at, among others, Arizona, Chicago, Tampa Bay, Cleveland and now the Jets. But McCown must be doing something right if he's stuck around this long. The 38-year-old was a third round pick in the 2002 NFL Draft by the Cardinals and is the third oldest starting QB in the league this season, only behind Tom Brady and Drew Brees. McCown has yet to have had any sort of five INT meltdown games for the Jets, as he's thrown just four picks in five games.

3 Hurtin' Tom

Tom Brady was diagnosed with an AC Joint sprain in his shoulder. The question now is — will Brady miss any time from the injury? Brady is 40-years-old and has never taken a beating like this in his football life. Brady has been sacked 16 times so far this season and has been under constant pressure, having to hold the football a bit longer without the underneath security blanket of Julian Edelman.

During a time when almost all quarterback's bodies break down (late 30s etc), Brady has not missed a game he has been eligible to play in since 2008. He will not likely miss this Sunday's game against the Jets either but we now know for sure that No. 12 is not 100 percent. MATT BURKE

Scorpio A change at home will give you some breathing room. Cut your overhead and find a strategy that will help you move forward. Do things your way.

Sagittarius Your vision will be clouded by emotional matters. Try to separate your personal and professional lives to avoid mistakes. Don't feel pressured by what others do or say.

Pisces Love, marriage, children or changes to your current lifestyle are prominent. Look at your options and consider what's most realistic for you at this stage in life. EUGENIA LAST
